If your life feels a bit stress-filled and out of balance; if you find yourself bogged down with work and family obligations and have little time for self-care, or if you know someone who is struggling with these issues, give yourself or someone else the gift of this retreat. With three days in the beautiful and supportive environment of Harmony Hill, surrounded by nature and nourished with healthy meals, begin your new year with the time and support needed to rediscover a positive outlook, healthful habits, emotional wellbeing, a positive attitude and sense of gratitude. This retreat will allow you to feel the support of others who are seeking health and balance while learning basic principles of the science of healthy living and experiencing practices that you will learn to incorporate into your daily life.

At the end of this retreat participants will:

- Understand the basic principles of Ayurveda - the science of life
- Learn lifestyle practices that can help to manage stress
- Connect with inner wisdom around what makes you feel healthy and happy
- Reconnect to your personal vision of happiness
- Learn to remove toxic substances from your everyday life
- Discover how to use nature as medicine
- Experience movement and breath practices while tapping into the ability to prioritize self-care

Retreat Leader: Patti Wetsch-Wolfrom

Patti is an oncology nurse, a Chinese medicine practitioner, an Ayurvedic practitioner, an integrative nurse coach, and yoga instructor who has dedicated her life to the pursuit of wellbeing. While expressing her gift of service, Patti uses the gifts of the healing arts of medicine to promote a balanced approach to life. From this platform she has developed a retreat format based on the principles of Ayurveda. This holistic approach teaches people how to reconnect to the soul of self, while rediscovering their passions, talents and confidence so that they may live a balanced, fulfilling and personally productive life.
